TENNESSEE WESLEYAN COLLEGE

ATHENS, TENNESSEE

MERNER - PFEIFFER LIBRARY TENNESSEE WESLEYAN COLLEGF ATHENS, TN. 37303 It was more than a century ago, when the site of Athens was trees, dense underbrosh, and wild flowers— when Nature was the supreme ruler of our campus and Natural law her golden scepter, that Nocatula Kowena lived.

Nocatula was the beautiful daughter of a great Cherokee Indian chief, Kowena. She was betrothed to one of the bravest young chiefs of her trihe, but Fate came between the Indian lovers.

Indian lovers. A young English soldier, handsome and lovable, came to the wigwam one day and when he saw the leantiful Nocatula he loved her. Soon Nocatula lovel him too. One afternoon, during Indian summer, Nocatula and the English-man were roaming through the woods, when the Indian brave, enragel with jealcusy and harred, sprang from am-bush and hurled his hunting knife into the heart of the English soldier.

Notatula was desperately unhappy when her lover was killed. Frantically she seized the knife from his breast and plunged it into her own, and fell dying at his feet.

In keeping with the trada custom of hurrying the be-trothed. Nocatula and her lover were burred where they were found lying. A branch of hackberry with ripe berries on it was placed in the hand of Nocatula, symbolizing her womanly qualities of grace and heatty: In the hands of her lover was put a twig of black oak with ripe acoms on it, the oak sym-bolic of the strength and sturthness of young manhood.

From these seeds sprang two leautiful trees. Their roots interimingled, and their branches overlapped, and to-day this same oak and hacklerry stand here on our campus, so close tegether that one would think that they came from the same root if he did not observe the difference in their barks and foliage.

As our dear old college has grown from year to year, the legend trees have been silent sentinels—guards by day and by night. They cannot speak in our tongue, lut some-how when any great crusis comes in the life of the school, a brezze stress their branches and leaves, and a low, murnuring, whish of anxiety and interest is heard. When the crisis is passed, the low anxiens which gives way to a soluting bithe-sate stir of approach and communicate low and applauded.

HIGH SCHOOL

From books and lessons we're turning; For into the Springtime of Youth, There always comes a yearning; To learn for itself the truth.

And altho we may leave this College; With lessons rich and dear, We shall get our greater knowledge, From another source than here.

For life is a great Library, Of treasures to be found— And study should never be dreary, Where such priceless lessons abound.

Thus we'll learn the Truth of living; To do our best each day, That a blessing comes, from giving Our best in each word we say.

COLLEGE

The Spring has come! All nature in gladness rejoices; In harmony with Nature's song We joyfully tune our voices.

Wake! cries the Wind, To flower and bird; As he gently passes, Sweet music is heard.

The flowers come forth— Lift their heads to the sun. God smiled upon the earth— New life has begun.

Wake! cries Youth, Your work here is done. Life is not finished, It has only begun!

LITERARY

The Ugly Duckling

"Wasn't the play wonderful!" exclaimed Jeanette to a group of girls, as they sat on the steps of the old red brick building, in the spring sunshine.

"Simply precious! And that grand looking man who played the lover. He's the best looking thing I ever saw," cooed Marian as she propped herself in a more comfortable position.

Louise's brown eyes grew soft as she remembered the charms of the actor. "That man would put Apollo to shame," she murmured.

"Say, do any of you know his name?" asked Marian. "I cut that picture of his profile off one of the ads, but it didn't give his name."

Nobody answered for a moment. The quiet was broken by the class bell, and Jean spoke disgustedly. "Well, doesn't anybody know his name? Can't anybody find out his name? Don't all speak at once."

Just then a small, quiet looking girl came up the steps. At first none of the group spoke to her or appeared to notice her at all. Her smooth brown hair was drawn neatly over her ears, and she was intent on a book which she held open in her hands. She was almost through the doorway when Jean called to her.

"Ann, did you go to the play last night? Yes? Well, do you know the name of the man in the play?"

To the surprise of all the girls, the dove-like Ann suddenly blushed a fiery red.

"Why-," she stammered, "his name is Peter Conway."

"Peter-!" exclaimed the three girls in one breath.

Marian was the first to recover herself. "Oh, aren't you glad that is his name?" she drawled. "I thought maybe it would be Percy or Oscar, or-"

"Oh, shut up, Marian. Nobody cares what you thought," snapped Jean. "Now go on Ann, and talk fast. Do you know any more about him? Have you ever spoken to him? How did you find out his name?"

Before Ann could answer, the bell rang again, and Marian jumped up saying, "That's the last bell. I've got to hoof it up to Math."

She started up the steps, and Ann seized the opportunity to run up the steps after her.

Jean and Louise sat to await their next class period, staring at each other in wide-eyed amazement.

"Well," drawled Louise. "Can you beat that? How in the world did that little stick of an Ann Harvey ever happen to know that angel man's name?"

Page Sixty

"Now wasn't that queer? I can't imagine how she ever knew. If that dear bell hadn't rung we might have found out."

locatula

"I'll bet you this," said Louise, struck with a new thought. "That man will be at the Junior-Senior Banquet tonight. Wonder who'll have the bliss of being his partner?"

"How should I know?" replied Jean, "since it's not me? What are you going to wear? Got a new dress?"

"Yes, it's blue. Oh Heavens! here comes the Dean. I'm supposed to be in study hall."

That evening in a plain little room, Ann Harvey was dressing. At school nobody ever paid any attention to her. None of the boys ever talked to her. None of the girls were chummy with her. Not that they disliked her, they simply did not stop to notice her at all. That day hed not been different from other days, and yet, for some reason she was excited. None of the school boys had asked her to go to the Banquet. None of the girls had asked her if she was going, what she was going to wear, or any of the ordinary questions, but Ann was very much excited. She dressed carefully, working a long time on her hair, it must look its best. Finally she was ready.

When the teacher came to call the girls who had dates waiting downstairs, everybody was surprised to hear her call Ann Harvey.

As Ann eame out of her room, Jean and Marian were standing at the head of the stairs, waiting for the other girls.

Jean punched Marian. "Look at Ann. Just look at her. Who do you suppose is taking her?"

"She looks pretty tonight. I love that yellow, headed dress. It makes her hair look so much blacker," answered Marian.

"And I never noticed until now that she is pretty," said Jean. "Here are the other girls. Let's go on."

Halfway down the stairway, a wave of excitement seemed to pass over the whole group of girls. The man who had been the sole topic of conversation all day, the man of the play, Peter Conway, was waiting in the parlor. To the utter amazement of everyone, it was to Ann Harvey that he turned with his most charming manner.

That evening, with the banquet, the handsome Mr. Conway, her pretty dress, and all the attention she received, was a bright spot in Ann's drah existence. For the first time in her life Ann was the center of interest, the topic of conversation, and the attraction for all eyes. If Ann was interested in Peter Conway, it was apparent that he was attracted by her.

Later, after the Banquet was over, and Ann, flushed and star-eyed with happiness was again in her room, Jean, Louise, and Marian rushed in to tell her how pretty she had looked, and more important, to find out how she had happened to know Mr. Conway.

At the last question Ann laughed, and told them she had met him at a New Year's dance the winter before. They asked many questions, and Ann forgot her shyness in answering them. After a long talk, the girls went to their rooms. Although none of the girls would have admitted it, Ann would never be the same uninteresting Ann to any of them, since the glamor of Peter Conway remained with her.

"Well, I guess we'll all take back seats now, if we're ever going to," exploded Louise.

"I nearly fainted when I saw that darling Mr. Conway start after Ann Harvey," said Marian.

"Say, do any of you believe that fairy stories come true?" asked Jean.

"No, if you mean Cinderella, for it doesn't fit this," answered Marian.

"I don't mean Cinderella, I mean the Ugly Duckling. Don't you remember that the little duck became a swan? That's what has happened to Ann."

"Yes, that's it," said Louise. "Ann is our little changeling. But girls, if Peter Conway ever comes this way again, just watch me get into action."

With Our Modern Poets

THE WANDER SONG

To follow the road that leads over the hill, To wander the path through the calley; I long to go with free heart and will, Like the river that winds through the valley.

To take my cop and sack I yearn, To leave my fate to hope and luck; To choose a road with a luring turn,

. Ind girdle the earth with the during Pluck.

The morning sun of an April day,

Awakens the wanderlust-

Light-footed, I hasten to take my way, 1 vagabond lover of rain and dust.

On the breathless hill in the sultry noon, I dream of far-off seas;

Drawn by the wild bees' murmurous croon, To scorn life's ministries.

But shadows lengthen and darkness falls,— There's a friendly feel to the homeward way; .In inborn longing within me calls,

All moorn longing within me calls, All roads lead home at the end of the day,

MARY NEAL CHILDRESS

SPRING

Hark! I hear a gentle rustling.

In the branches of the trees; .Ind a far-off lilting love song,

Coming softly on the breeze.

There's a sparkling, gurgling, laughter, In the tiny little brook;

Could you hear it chuckling softly

As it passed you shady nook? Did you see the green buds open?

Did you hear the robin sing?

Can you understand the meaning

Of the message which he brings? Yesterday was cold and gloomy,

Not a song bird on the wing;

Can this all be just enchantment, Or is it really, truly, spring?

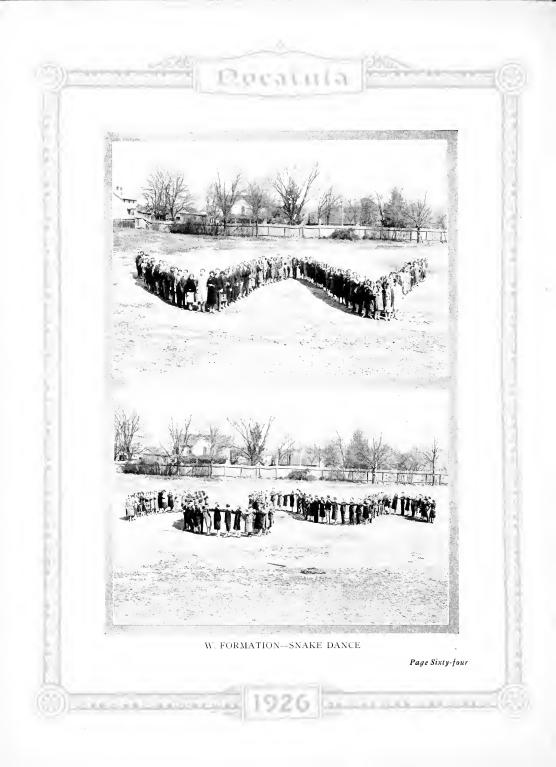

There's a happy, happy thought,

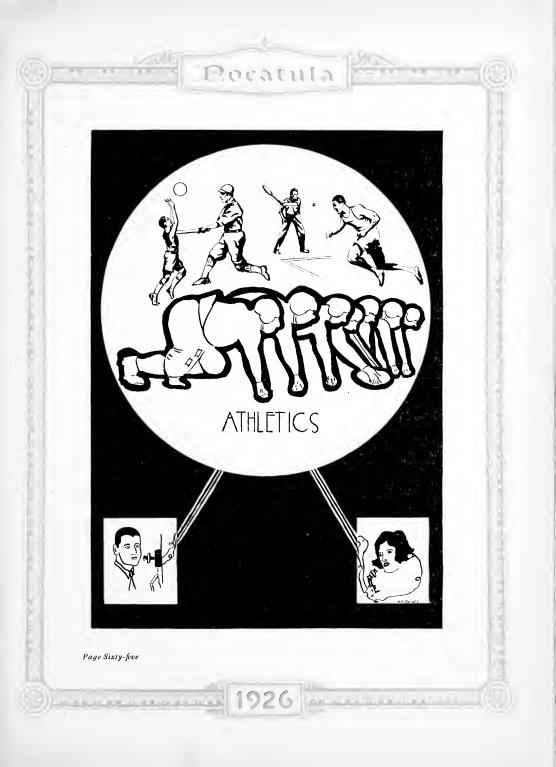

Which to us, the springlime gives; Despite the cares that life has brought us, Is it not just joy to live?

Wesleyan Football

Localuli

The Tennessee Wesleyan Football Eleven, under the direction of Coach Parsons had a very successful season. Starting practice with only a few letter men on the squad, the team made a record of which we are proud.

The opening game caught them with only one week of real training and practice, but they held the fast, scrappy Etowah High School team to a scoreless tie. The second game was with the University of Chattanooga Frosh. Although Wesleyan was doped to be swamped by about forty points, the game was one of the prettiest and hardest fought ever seen in Athens, the U. of C. team winning by one touchdown and a safety, 8 to 0. Then in succession Wesleyan defeated Maryville Poly by a 14 to 0 score. Tusculum College by a 13 to 0 score, and Bradley County High by a 14 to 0 score.

The following week with Captain Durham, "Big" Grant, and Bivens out of the game with injuries, Wesleyan held the fast, heavy Milligan College team to a 5 to 0 score in the first half, to be outclassed in the fourth quarter through lack of reserves, and losing the game, 30 to 0. The team then took a trip to Johnson City the next week, and lost the game to Normal by a score of 19 to 0.

The grand climax of the season came with the Thanksgiving game. In this game the Wesleyan Bulldog entirely outclassed the big Hiwassee College Eleven, and won a very muddy game by the score of 6 to 0.

Coach Parsons is already planning and building for next year, and the prospects for a wonderful team next fall are the brightest in the history of the college.

BASKETBALL

This year the Wesleyan Basketball team made a creditable record for itself, and showed its ability by whipping some of the best teams in East Tennessee. Following is the list of games played, and the scores:
